Repudiate Privately And Publicly Eruption Of Racial And Religious Hatred, U. S. Catholic Leaders Urge

The Roman Catholic hierarchy in the United States called upon Americans to protest privately and publicly against further manifestations of racial and religious hatred.

In a statement on behalf of the Administrative Board of Bishops of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, the Most Rev. Karl J. Alter, Archbishop of Cincinnati, and board chairman, reports the New York Times, said that recent defilements of synagogues, churches, schools, and other buildings indicated that "religious and racial hatred are widespread."

The conference is the secretariat of the 217 United States Bishops, Archbishops, and Cardinals. Sixteen of the prelates are on the board, including the six American Cardinals. In addition to Archbishop Alter, the board members are:

Richard Cardinal Cushing, of Boston; Albert Cardinal Meyer of Chicago; James Francis Cardinal McIntyre, of Los Angeles; Francis Cardinal Spellman, of New York; John Cardinal O'Hara of Philadelphia; and Aloisius Cardinal Muench, who is serving in the Vatican.

Also, the Most Revs. Leo Binz, Archbishop of Dubuque, Iowa; Joseph E. Ritter, Archbishop of St. Louis; William O. Brady, Archbishop of St. Paul; Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington; Albert R. Zuroweste, Bishop of Belleville, Ill.; Lawrence J. Shehan, Bishop of Bridgeport, Conn.; Allen J. Babcock, Bishop of Grand Rapids, Mich.; Joseph M. Gilmore, Bishop of Helena, Mont., and Joseph T. McGucken, Bishop of Sacramento, Calif.

The text of the statement issued by Archbishop Alter follows:

The widespread eruption of religious and racial bigotry recorded in recent press dispatches has not only shocked the whole civilized world but calls insistently for a vigorous and public repudiation of the evil by all right-minded citizens.

We deplore any revival of the anti-Semitic prejudice which in its earlier manifestation culminated in such terrible disaster. The fact that a malevolent spirit of hatred has found expression not only in one country, but in various countries simultaneously, would seem to indicate an organized plan of action or some common origin.

Whatever may be the source of the evil or the sinister purpose to be served, the danger should be immediately recognized and effective measures taken to eradicate

N. Y. May Close Schools On Jewish Holy Days In Fall

Public school pupils in New York may get three extra holidays a year, Dr. John J. Theobald, the Superintendent of Schools, said he would recommend closing city schools on the Jewish high holy days, Rosh Hashonah, the Jewish New Year; and Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement.

Orthodox and Conservative Jews observe Rosh Hashonah for two days and Reform Jews for one day. The public schools would be closed for two days. Yom Kippur is observed for one day, says the New York Times. Approval of the plan rests with the Board of Education, which will act on the calendar for the 1960-61 school year some time this spring.

According to the board's by-laws, in addition to certain legal holidays the public schools close on Good Friday and the following week, which is the Easter recess. The schools are also closed from Christmas Day through January 1. Public schools in Brooklyn, and more recently in Queens, are also closed on the second Thursday in June for Anniversary Day. This holiday, which was retained by Brooklyn schools when that borough was incorporated into the city before the turn of the century, is traditionally a day for parades by Protestant Sunday school pupils.

Dr. Theobald said his decision

Israel Accepts No One As Jew Without The Religion

New Government directives on the question "What Is a Jew?" were issued in Jerusalem by Interior Minister Moshe Shapiro. The Minister, who represents the religious bloc in Israel, ruled that no individual could be officially recognized in Israel as a Jew unless he was a member of the Jewish faith.

His directives refer to the registration of religion and nationality only and have nothing to do with Israeli citizenship, which is open to all nationalities and creeds, says the New York Times. People of Arab nationality who belong to the Christian, Moslem or other faiths are recognized as Israeli citizens.

Principally affected by the new ruling are children whose fathers are Jewish and mothers non-Jewish. Rabbinic law says children follow the religion of their mothers. Hence children whose mothers are not Jewish will be required to go through rabbinic conversion if they wish to be accepted as Jews in Israel.

Mr. Shapiro's directives reverse a decision by the previous Government that said Jewish religion and nationality were separate. The old directives, which would have allowed children of mixed marriages to claim Jewish nationality without being converted if both parents wished it, had caused bitter protests among Orthodox Jewish communities in Israel and abroad.

The new directives contradict rabbinic interpretation on a significant point. Rabbinic law says that apostates remain Jews. Mr. Shapiro defined a Jew as "a person born of a Jewish mother who does not belong to another religion, or one who was converted in accordance with religious law."

The deviation that is designed to exclude apostates is calculated, apparently, to avoid anomalous situations such as occurring when a Roman Catholic monk who had been born a Jew claimed Israeli citizenship under legislation that accorded it automatically to all Jews upon arrival in the country.

The issue centering on the question of who is a Jew evoked sharp controversy in Israel last June and resulted in a Cabinet crisis, says the New York Times. In protest against the secular definition of what constitutes a member of the Jewish people, Mr. Shapiro resigned his post as Minister of Religions at that time.

U. S. Attaché Says Effort To Help Jews Leave Hitler's Germany Led To Surprise Nazi Medal For Lindbergh

It was an effort to help Jews get out of Hitlerite Germany that led to Charles A. Lindbergh's getting a surprise Nazi decoration for which he was later bitterly denounced, according to the then United States military attaché in Berlin.

The attaché, Col. Truman Smith, now retired, says in a memoir that Ambassador Hugh Wilson invoked the famous trans-Atlantic flier as a means for attracting Hermann Goering, the No. 2 Nazi, to a dinner on October 18, 1938, to try out a State Department proposal, reports the New York Times. Goering then suddenly presented the medal.

The Smith memoir has been on deposit since December 7, 1957, at the Yale University Library. But its existence has just been made known by John Chamberlain, an editor of National Review, in an article in that conservative weekly sharply criticizing a new book on Brigadier General Lindbergh.

Colonel Smith writes that Mrs. Anne Lindbergh, the flier's wife, looked at the decoration the same night, and remarked: "The Albatross." This was presumably an allusion to the way a slain sea bird was hung around a sailor's neck in Samuel Taylor Coleridge's "Rime of the Ancient Mariner" as a curse.

Soon afterward, new anti-Jewish violence erupted in Germany, and such individuals as Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes assailed the then Colonel Lindbergh for accepting the decoration.

The attacks mounted when the flier campaigned for United States neutrality after World War II broke out in Europe. On April 25, 1941, President Roosevelt likened him to a "copperhead", the term for Civil War appeasers and defeatists in the North. Thereupon Colonel Lindbergh resigned his commission.

Colonel Smith was military attaché from August, 1936, to April, 1939. He is now living in retirement at Greenfield Hill, Fairfield, Conn., says the New York Times. His 163-page manuscript was written on a mid-1953 Army Intelligence Division request for facts on the Lindbergh missions "for historical purposes."

The Smith memoir contains a letter by him to Colonel Smith, dated May 31, 1955, which reads:

"The decoration Goering gave me that night never caused me any worry, and I doubt that it caused me much additional difficulty. It turned out to be a convenient object of attack for our political opposition; but if there had been no decoration, they would have found something else. I always regarded the fuss about it as a sort of teapot tempest. If my memory is correct, both the French Ambassador and Henry Ford got one at about the same time."

The Smith memoir says the visit involving the decoration grew out of a German invitation to an air congress. Ambassador Wilson was simultaneously trying to get Goering to visit the United States Embassy, bypassing Foreign Minister Joachim Ribbentrop.

Mr. Wilson thought a Lindbergh visit would make possible a dinner with Goering. The envoy, Colonel Smith writes, "hoped to obtain at such a dinner Goering's support for certain measures especially desired by the State Department concerning the easing of the financial plight of the large number of Jews who were being forced to emigrate from Germany in a penniless condition."

The Ambassador, the manuscript adds, "felt that Goering was about the only leader in the Nazi government who might be won over to favor such a humanitarian measure," and Goering support might bring approval by Chancellor Adolf Hitler, says the New York Times. The manuscript describes how Goering arrived at the dinner and suddenly surprised the then Colonel Lindbergh with the Service Cross of the German Eagle, "for his services to the aviation of the world, and particularly for his historic 1927 solo flight across the Atlantic."

A letter from Ambassador Wilson to Colonel Lindbergh, dated August 4, 1941, says "neither you, nor I, nor any other American present had any previous hint that the presentation would be made." Its refusal under the circumstances, the letter adds, would have been "a breach of good taste," and "an act offensive to a guest of the Ambassador of your country."

The manuscript does not detail what happened to the pro-Jewish move by the United States. Colonel Smith writes that "Lindbergh distrusted the Nazi government of Germany, and found its anti-Semitic policies abhorrent." The period of relaxation in international tension, following the Munich agreement on Czechoslovakia, was disrupted by anti-Semitic riots in Germany November 9, 1938, shocking the world.

Colonel Lindbergh returned to the United States in April, 1939, making a survey of aircraft production for the Army, and later began his celebrated campaign for keeping the United States out of World War II.

During the war, he spent six months in the Pacific as a United Aircraft Corporation representative, and actually flew fifty combat missions, downing at least two Japanese Zeroes, says the New York Times. In February, 1954, President Eisenhower named him a brigadier general in the Air Force Reserve. General Lindbergh is now a consultant for Pan American World Airways, and lives at Scott's Cove, Darien, Conn.

N. Y. MAY CLOSE SCHOOLS

to close the schools on Jewish holy days had been prompted by "administrative" reasons. "On these three days we have extension absences of Jewish teachers and pupils," he said. "They are not always in the same schools, however. As a result, in some school buildings we have full attendance by non-Jewish children and almost complete absence of the staff. This, in my opinion, creates safety hazards, which I think we should not risk."

Over the years, many parent and teachers have also contended that the absence of Jewish pupils and teachers on the holy days made any regular class program impossible, says the New York Times. If the board authorizes the closing of schools on the three days, the city system would still be above the 180-day school year required by state law. The city school year generally runs about 190 days.

Rosh Hashonah will be observed this year on Thursday, September 22, and Friday. Yom Kippur falls on Saturday, October 1, when the public schools are normally closed.

REPUDIATE ERUPTION

the infection before it can spread.

The defilement of various synagogues, churches, schools, and other buildings with derogatory symbols has revealed the existence of racial hatred. It has not been confined to any group. Various Catholic and other Christian churches have been desecrated as well as Jewish temples, indicating that religious and racial hatred are widespread and constitute a common motivation of the outrages.

Speaking for the Administrative Board of Bishops of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, I wish to declare our sympathy with those who have suffered injury. On behalf of the Bishops I express our detestation of any and every kind of hatred and bigotry, no matter what its source or against whom it may have been registered.

We call on all citizens, whether Christians or Jews, and on all those who love truth and justice, to protest privately and publicly against further manifestation of bigotry in all its aspects and in whatever form it may be expressed. We urge that all right-minded people refrain from any word or deed which might seem to condone the circulation of rumors, false reports, or misrepresentation which embitters our mutual relations and retards the advancement of our common welfare.

Foremost Authority On The Theory And History Of The U.S. Labor Movement

BY HAZEL McGRATH, OF THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN NEWS SERVICE

Because one evening long ago his aunt worked late to fit a dress, Selig Perlman came to the University of Wisconsin in 1909 to begin an association that has proved fruitful, long, and happy. He retired July 1 at the age of seventy years with a reputation as the foremost authority on the theory and history of the American labor movement, still awed at the role that chance plays in men's lives.

Born in Bialystok, Russia, to Mordecai and Pauline Perlman, he was graduated at the age of seventeen from the government school, with little hope for the future. His family had neither the money nor the influence to get him into any Russian university under the tiny Jewish quota, and young Selig despaired of obtaining the higher education he yearned for. "I fully expected to be the class ne'er do well," he says. One day he chanced upon a magazine article describing the beauties of the University of Naples and, what was more important to him, the low cost of living there. His parents, eager to do their best for their first-born, scraped together enough money to see him through for a year. In Naples he met the man and woman who were to have a profound influence on his life.

He never tires of telling it: "One of my aunts had gone to New York and obtained a good position as a modiste. As a special favor, she worked late one night to fit a traveling dress for Mrs. William English Walling, who was sailing next day with her husband for Naples. Aunt mentioned me to Mrs. Walling, and gave her my Naples address. The Wallings looked me up there, took me under their wing, and on the pretext of 'Russian lessons' gave me generous weekly subsidies to supplement my meager allowance. Later they helped me to come to America." Young Perlman sailed for the United States on a bleak January day in 1908.

"I recall how Mr. Walling made the decision for me to go to the University of Wisconsin after I arrived in New York. He mentioned several universities, but remembering that his friends, Richard T. Ely and John R. Commons, were on the Wisconsin faculty, he decided that was the place for me. I shall never forget the delicacy with which he pressed upon me a generous sum to pay for my fare and tuition," he says. In 1910 Perlman was awarded his B.A. degree in economics, and in 1912 he brought his parents and his younger brother, Jacob, to the United States. From 1913

TORONTO MARRIAGES

ELKIND—GOLDSTEIN

The marriage of Miss Donna Goldstein, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Goldstein, 540 Douglas Avenue, to David Elkind, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Elkind, 56 Hillcrest Drive, took place at Beth Sholom Synagogue, on January 24, at half-past five o'clock. Rabbi David Monson officiated, assisted by Cantor Henry Wahrman. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a long gown of white satin brocade, made with long sleeves; and fitted bodice, with a square neckline embroidered in clusters of crystal and pearl beads; the bouffant skirt forming a chapel train, and styled with looped and draped side panels. A matching crown held her three-tiered, tulle illusion veil; and she carried white orchids. Mrs. David Warsh, sister of the groom, as matron of honour, wore a gown of lace over pink; with off-the-shoulder neckline; short sleeves; and a bouffant skirt. Miss Judy Sugar, the maid of honour, wore a peau de soie gown of the same colour and similar style; with a beaded bodice. They had matching headpieces; short white gloves; and colonial cascades of roses and carnations. Miss Sasha Swaye, cousin of the bride, as junior bridesmaid, wore a pale pink, peau de soie gown, made with a pleated bodice; very full skirt; and long, puffed sleeves. Her headpiece was of white feathered carnations; and she carried a puff of roses and carnations. Diane Warsh, niece of the groom, was flower girl, and wore a pink dress; and a coronet of white feathered carnations; and carried a nosegay of roses and baby chrysanthemums. Manny Elkind, brother of the groom, acted as best man. The ushers were: Stanley Elkind, Marvin Elkind, cousins of the groom; Sheldon Taerk, David Dennis, Joel Kopstein, Stanley Cohen, Jerry Swaye, cousin of the bride; Morton Greenglass, Jack Ladowsky, and David Warsh, brother-in-law of the groom. Billy Goldstein, brother of the bride, was a junior usher. Aisle trees, of snapdragons, baby chrysanthemums, and spiral eucalyptus; and pyramid candelabra decorated the synagogue; and the canopy was adorned with carnations. An arbor of carnations decorated the hall; and the tables were arranged with candelabra and centrepieces of carnations, roses, and chrysanthemums. Mrs. Goldstein, mother of the bride, wore a long, pale pink and beaded peau de soie gown; with long sleeves; and front panels of lace; also a matching, beaded headpiece; and had a pink and white orchid corsage. Mrs. Elkind, mother of the groom, was in a long gown of pale pink peau de soie, made with a beaded bodice; and matching cummerbund, which extended to full-length drapery. Her hat matched it; and she had a pink and white orchid wristlet. Mr. and Mrs. David Elkind are spending their wedding trip travelling in England, France, Austria, Israel, Italy, and Spain. The bride went away in a light brown suit; and beige beaver coat; with a corsage of brown and beige orchids. They will take up residence at 45 Gardiner Street. Here for the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. Morris Wright, Mrs. Jack Wright, cousins of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Williams, Mrs. Ira Goldman, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Sherman, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Schreiber, Mr. and Mrs. George Berens, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Goldstein, uncle and aunt of the bride, and Fern and Sheldon; Mrs. J. Kamin, Mrs. S. Swaye, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Wright, uncle and aunt of the bride; Mrs. June Wright, aunt of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Goldhar, Mr. and Mrs. M. Pomerance, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Losev, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Wright, uncle and aunt of the bride, and Stephen; Mr. and Mrs. Allan Swaye, uncle and aunt of the bride, and Sheldon, Paul, Jerry, and Sasha; all of Hamilton, Ont.; Mrs. J. Marcus, Miss Esther Marcus, of Dundas, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. I. Norris, Mr. and Mrs. A. Rosenberg, all of Kitchener, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. David Warsh, brother-in-law and sister of the groom, of Brantford, Ont.; David Epstein, of Ottawa, Ont.; Henry Cohen, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Sol. Godfried and Leslie and Ellen, Rochester, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. S. Godfried, of Rochester, N. Y.; Mrs. Benjamin Peretz, cousin of the groom, of Brooklyn, N. A cold, however mild, should never be neglected. It may start as a simple case of "sniffles" but may develop into pneumonia if neglected. Staying indoors and drinking plenty of milk, water and fruit juices will usually help to keep it under control.

CLASS IN COOKERY

one-quarter pound butter
two eggs
one teaspoon baking soda
one and one-half cups flour
one-half cup brown sugar
one-half cup chopped walnuts
one cup white sugar
one and one-half teaspoons baking powder
one cup sour cream
one-quarter teaspoon salt
cinnamon to taste
four round pineapple slices

Cream together the butter, white sugar, and egg yolks, and add sour cream. Sift the flour, baking soda, baking powder, salt, together three times, and blend into the first mixture. Beat the egg whites, and add to the batter. Grease a small, square, pyrex dish. Pour one-half of the mixture into the greased pan. Sprinkle one-quarter cup of chopped walnuts, teaspoon cinnamon, and one-quarter cup brown sugar over the cake. Set the pineapple slices on top and pour over them the rest of the mixture. Cover with the remaining chopped walnuts, brown sugar and cinnamon. Cut the unbaked cake into squares. Bake at 350 degrees for fifty to sixty minutes.

HAMPTON POLONAISE WHITE CAKE

one-half pound butter
two egg whites unbeaten
one and two-thirds cups flour
one teaspoon vanilla
one cup sugar
three-quarters cup milk
two teaspoons baking powder
pinch of salt

Place all ingredients in a large bowl and beat at a medium speed in an electric mixing machine for three minutes till smooth. Pour batter into a lightly greased nine-by-four-inch loaf pan. Bake at 350 degrees for thirty minutes. When cool slice the cake in layers.

Filling

one and one-half cups milk
one and one-half tablespoons cornstarch three-quarters pound citron or mixed glacee fruit four round teaspoons sugar

to 1915 he was special investigator for the U. S. Commission on Industrial Relations, and in 1915 he returned to Wisconsin to take his Ph.D. degree and to do research for Prof. Ely.

By 1918 he was married to Eva Shaber, of Nashua, N. H., and "History of Labor In The U.S.," which he wrote with Commons, was published. By 1921 he was assistant professor, by 1922 his "History of Trade Unionism in the U. S." came out, and by 1928, when he was full professor, his "A Theory Of The Labor Movement" was hailed as the definitive volume in the field. Reissued in 1949 and 1953, it has been translated into Italian, Spanish, Indonesian, Japanese, and German.

In 1930 his wife died. Leaving his boys, Mark and David, in the care of their aunt, Fannie Shaber, Perlman sailed for Europe to seek in travel some ease for his sorrow. He found change everywhere; and Bialystok a part of Poland. On his return to America he married Fannie Shaber, who bore him two daughters, Eva and Rachel.

In 1933 Prof. Perlman taught at University College, Cardiff, Wales, as exchange professor with H. A. Marquand. He gave a number of public lectures in Britain and was one of five speakers to address the silver jubilee convention of the Institute of Labour Management. Prof. Perlman has twice spent the summer months in Israel: in 1955 to lecture on the American labor movement; in 1957 as consultant to the economics department at Hebrew University in Jerusalem. He declined the chair offered him by Hebrew University. "I have become too Americanized," he explains.

In 1957 Dr. Perlman was named Commons Professor of Economics at the University. In December of 1958, on his 70th birthday, the Wisconsin Bnai Brith Foundation established the "Selig Perlman Lectureship" in tribute to his "dedicated scholarship and service" to the academic and Jewish communities. For this occasion the Hillel Student Council ordered ten trees to be planted in Israel in his name, "In consonance with the teaching of Hillel the Elder: 'Do not separate yourself from the community.'"

Prof. Perlman is now represented in Israel by the trees and by his younger daughter, Rachel, who learned Hebrew so that she might serve as occupational therapist at a psychiatric hospital in Jerusalem. He is represented in other parts of the world by his former students who are teaching or who are labor attaches at U. S. embassies in England, Sweden, and Italy, in Indonesia, Burma, and Japan.

His daughter, Eva, is married to Dr. Ernst Silversmith, of the Du Pont Company, and is the mother of two daughters. Mark, who is also married and the father of a small girl, followed in his father's path to become a labor economist and faculty member at Johns Hopkins University. David, a biochemist for Squibb, was recently in Europe to

Montreal City And District Bank Shows Record Earnings And Assets

New records in total assets and earnings were attained by The Montreal City and District Savings Bank in the year ended December 31, 1959, it was indicated in the 113th annual report submitted at the annual general meeting of the bank's shareholders, in Montreal.

The president, Guy Vanier, QC, in his address, covered some broad aspects of Canada's economic position, prospects and trends. He said that too large a share of our expansion was being financed through borrowing outside Canada. He called for a greater measure of saving within Canada to pay for capital expenditures, or alternatively for a slowing down of our rate of expansion.

He warned against continuing to permit growth of foreign ownership of our means of production. "It is evident," he declared, "that our economy is passing rapidly into the hands of new masters under the indifferent eyes of a large number of Canadians. Do we realize that in the space of twelve months we have been compelled to pay tribute to aliens to the extent of $587 millions in the guise of interest and dividends?"

He called for greater austerity. "The need of a certain equilibrium," he said, "between the will to work, the spirit of enterprise, the norm of savings and the rhythm of our expansion would seem to be essential as a prudent solution. . . . Personal available income, after taxes, amounts to $24 billions, but we spend more than $22 billions. . . . If Canadians were to place a greater stake on the future of their own homeland, they would soon acquire the habit of eliminating certain unproductive outlays and would become more intimately interested in industries on which their own personal prosperity and that of the whole nation might depend."

The general manager, Antonio Rainville, noted that the bank maintained a high liquidity ratio. Combined total of cash assets and investments exceed 76% of deposit liabilities.

During the year the bank opened five new branches (bringing the total to 44) and plans to build more in 1960.

Mr. Rainville noted that deposits by the Federal Governments showed an increase of $5 million, while savings deposits of individuals showed a decrease of $3 million. He attributed the latter decrease mainly to a record amount of subscriptions for Canada Savings Bonds, but said that the credit restriction policy enforced in 1959 was also a factor in limiting the increase in bank deposits.

deliver a paper at a professional conference in Prague.

Newspaper editorial columns this spring have cited Perlman's contributions to Wisconsin: "With his retirement one of the most colorful and significant eras in the history of the University of Wisconsin will draw to a close. In many respects, the words 'labor economics' and 'Perlman' have become virtually synonymous." These sentiments in the Sheboygan Press were echoed throughout the state. "His teaching and work in the trade unions themselves have helped the labor movement to a better understanding of its role in society and its place in history. It might be said of him that he is the psychiatrist to the labor movement," the Madison Capital Times commented. Last February the Wisconsin State Senate and Assembly concurred in a joint resolution pointing out that Prof. Perlman "has given a life of service to Wisconsin and its University and is now entitled to rest on his laurels."

RELIGION IN SOVIET RUSSIA

dially received by its venerable Imam, Khatib, in the company of a colleague, Mustafa Akhmedzan. They told me that in 1942 the Soviet government permitted the Moslems to reopen their mosques and religious schools.

Three regional Chief Moslem Religious Administration were then established, each headed by a chief Mufti. The government allocated certain funds for the repair of mosques and other expenses connected with religious activities. The budgets of the three Administrations are, however, much larger than the government allocations and are therefore supplemented by contributions from local Moslem religious communities.

Four madrasses (seminaries) train Imams and other Moslem clerics; some candidates for the Imamat are permitted to study at the University of al-Althar in Cairo. In 1956, a new edition of the Koran was brought out. Pilgrimages to Mecca by groups of 20-25 are not interfered with, and my two interlocutors made the trip in 1956 and 1958. In recent years members of the religious administration have attended frequent meetings and congresses in various Moslem countries such as Egypt, Syria, Saudi Arabia, Indonesia, and Pakistan.

Similarly, guests from abroad are welcome and visits by foreign Moslem dignitaries or delegations are a frequent occurrence. The Moslem population of the Soviet Union, just as the Russian Orthodox, is allowed a considerable measure of nationwide self-organization and of contact and co-operation with kindred bodies abroad. There is no trace of the isolation imposed on the Jewish religious communities.

Last Rosh Hashanah, the Moscow rabbi, Arye Levin, was permitted to exchange messages with Israeli, British, and other rabbis. This was hopefully interpreted as a sign that the Soviet authorities were ready to tolerate a few breaches in the wall of isolation surrounding Soviet Jewry. But the invitations sent to ten Jewish communities by Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Jewish Congress, to attend the Stockholm Assembly proved of no avail; no delegates or observers from Soviet Jewry appeared.

When I asked the synagogue officials in Leningrad and Moscow the reasons for his abstention, I was told that it was because the Stockholm Assembly had dealt with secular affairs. Russian Jews, they said, constitute a religious community and therefore cannot participate in gatherings of a non-religious nature; had the Stockholm meeting dealt with religious matters, the response might have been otherwise. I refrained from inquiring whether even in such a case they would have been permitted to attend, but I had the impression that they themselves were rather doubtful.

Religion In Soviet Russia

BY DR. JOSEPH B. SCHECTMAN

There has been much talk in recent years of a "religious revival" in the Soviet Union. I do not know personally to what extent this is true in the smaller towns and peasant villages; to judge by the alarm sounded in the Communist press, there are signs that in "deep Russia" not only older people, but also the youth, even some Komsomol members, now frequent the churches, observe Orthodox holidays, and marry in religious ceremonies.

However, in the four major cities which I visited — Leningrad, Moscow, Kiev and Odessa — I did find the Orthodox churches crowded to capacity. But 90 percent of the throngs were women, elderly women moreover. Youth was conspicuous by its absence. The generations were somewhat better represented in the Moscow mosque. Elderly and middle-aged people predominated here, too, but a fair percentage of worshippers were in their thirties and forties.

The synagogues, whose services I attended on week-days, Friday evenings, and Saturday mornings, presented a dismaying picture. There were, of course, more worshippers present on Saturdays, but altogether the numbers were pitifully small. What is even more discouraging, there was hardly a single young face among them. The overwhelming majority were persons over 60 (the retirement age) with a modest sprinkling of middle-aged people. Each of the worshippers to whom I talked during and after the services was fully aware of this disheartening feature of synagogue life — and resigned to it.

More than once I was told: "We are apparently the last ones to come here. When we die out, who will come in our place? Certainly not our children or grandchildren. They don't care at all. And besides, those having a job know very well that attendance at a Synagogue would not improve their chances of promotion. It might even lose them their jobs. So they stay away. What can we do?" This passive submission is perhaps the most pathetic aspect of Soviet Jewish religious life.

The officials of the still existing synagogues profess to be satisfied with the present state of affairs. This is true particularly in Leningrad and Moscow, where the Soviet authorities, possibly because they don't want to antagonize the numerous foreign visitors, are relatively "liberal" in their treatment of Jewish prayerhouses. Members of the board of the beautiful 55-year-old Leningrad Choral Synagogue at 2 Lermontovski Prospect, probably the largest in Europe, proudly showed me the main hall seating 5,000 people, the graceful "smaller hall," the elegant chupah zal (wedding room) where, they said, religious weddings were frequent, the costly (250,000 rubles) mikveh, the bet hashechita (for poultry only; cattle are slaughtered at a specially equipped section of the general slaughterhouse).

The synagogue employs three cantors (the chief cantor receives a yearly salary of 70,000 rubles and is considered a major attraction), a choir of 8-10 voices, and an organist. The yearly budget amounts to 700,000 to 800,000 rubles and is made up by the congregants' contributions; the congregation has an account at the State Bank of 600,000 rubles. Besides the Choral Synagogue, Leningrad's 300,000 Jews, I was told, have eight additional synagogues and 16 minyonim, one in each of Leningrad's sixteen districts. Members of the board were eager to prove to me that everything connected with the synagogue was wholly satisfactory.

The officials of the seventy-year-old Choral Synagogue in Moscow, which seats one thousand and is located in Spasso-Glinichevsky street, were somewhat less exuberant. But they, too, tried to convey an impression of favorable conditions. (The 400,000 to 500,000 Jews of Moscow have, in addition to the Choral Synagogue, three smaller synagogues and some 18 minyonim in various parts of the city.)

The Choral Synagogue has a budget of 500,000 to 700,000 rubles, a ritual slaughterhouse, a mikveh, a cantor (whose salary is 70,000 rubles) and a choir. Seven to ten minyonim are held daily in the synagogue and adult classes in Gemora, Mishna, and Shulchan Aruch function each weekday morning; in the evenings, the congregants have an opportunity to study Gemora (50 to 60 people attend these lessons), Ein Yacov and Tehilim.

The most depressing impressions were afforded by the synagogues in Odessa and Kiev, each with a Jewish population of some 180,000 and allegedly the "most Jewish" cities in the Soviet Union. Of Odessa's pre-Soviet seven major and four smaller synagogues, with a registered membership of 17,000, only one is left, at 5 Lessnaya Street in the suburb of Peressyp. Eight minyonim function in other parts of the city.

The budget of the Odessa synagogue is about 100,000 rubles, covered partly by the income derived from the burial society, partly by contributions of the congregants and by the sale of seats for the High Holy Days. Daily services are held from 5 to 11 a.m. and from 7 to 9 p.m. Weekday attendance averages a few dozen, made up almost exclusively of older people. On Saturday mornings there are more worshippers, and still more on Rosh Chodesh. During the High Holy Days thousands come to pray.

The synagogue presents a very shabby appearance, but it has a cantor, a choir (which sings only at the Rosh Chodesh services), two shochtim and a mohel. However, the latter functionary, I was told, is largely "unemployed." Jews are afraid to have their children circumcised; it may jeopardize their jobs. Very few, too, dare to marry in the synagogue. During the last five months, only one wedding took place there.

The situation is very similar in Kiev's only synagogue, located in the suburb of Podol on Stezekavitskay Street. I visited its service on the eve of Rosh Chodesh. There were some 200 to 250 congregants in attendance, poorly dressed, and all elderly. There was a cantor but no choir. I was introduced to the shochet who doubles as a mohel and is almost "jobless" in both capacities. Nor are weddings performed in the synagogue; those who still care for a religious ceremony arrange it quietly, almost stealthily, in the privacy of their homes.

A middle-aged Jew told me: "What we miss most are siddurim (prayerbooks) and tallesim (prayer-shawls). I have heard that 3,000 prayerbooks were published last year by the State Publishing House for the Moscow religious community, but not a single copy has reached us here. You can see the worn-out condition of the few siddurim we still have. And as for a tallis, I myself was ready to pay 100 rubles but couldn't find one. Couldn't something be done in America or Israel in this regard? After all, we are not asking for anything extravagant."

Before coming to Soviet Russia, I had read much about the yeshiva which was established at the Moscow synagogue three years ago, and which was hailed as a major departure from the traditional Soviet policy of stifling every expression of Jewish religious life. I visited the yeshiva twice, observing but trying not to be observed by any of the officials, for I wanted to be spared the usual "sales talk" and supervised tour.

What struck me first was the pitifully small number of pupils — twenty. From private talks with a few of them, some young and some over forty, I learned that many more candidates had applied for admission, but were turned down because the Soviet authorities opposed expansion. (A vague promise to open another yeshiva in the Transcaucasian city of Tiflis was never fulfilled.) Another interesting feature of the institution is that about half of the students, the youngest ones, hail not from such traditional Jewish centers as the Ukraine or White Russia, but from the "exotic" Asiatic areas of Bokhara, Tashkent, and Georgia.

Small as it is, however, the Moscow yeshiva (seminary) seems to fulfill a significant function in whatever is left of the Jewish spiritual life: it gives the otherwise isolated Jewish religious communities the feeling of having a kind of substitute for the missing central body. Jews throughout the Soviet Union participate in its financing (the yeshiva now has a credit of 400,000 rubles at the State Bank). The board of the Leningrad synagogue proudly told me that they were contributing 5,000 rubles monthly to its support. In Odessa I learned that when the yeshiva was first established the synagogue sent 33,000 rubles. Leaders of the Kiev religious community seemed to be sincerely ashamed of the fact that they had not been able to aid the yeshiva.

Unlike other religious communities, Jewish religious congregations in the Soviet Union, as the recent Stockholm Assembly of the World Jewish Congress correctly observed, "have no central organization to serve common objectives and to take care of ritual services and similar activities indispensable to the maintenance of religious life." The 50th volume of the new edition of the Great Soviet Encyclopedia, in the chapter "Religion and Churches in the Soviet Union," states that while all the religions are represented by countrywide associations and entitled to organize congresses and conferences, as well as to publish newspapers and religious books, similar Jewish associations are not organized in a national framework and "the religious associations using the synagogues exist as separate entities."

I was curious to find out about the functioning of the other religious groups and during my stay in Moscow I decided to investigate, as far as possible, the status of the two non-Jewish religious bodies in the Soviet Union: the Russian Orthodox Church and the Moslem religious community.

I therefore paid a visit first to the Holy Synod at the Patriarchal See (5 Chisty Pereulok), the supreme body of the Russian Orthodox Church, and was directed to the External Church Relations Department, where I asked for information pertaining to the organization of the Church. The head of the department, Archimandrite Nikodim, readily obliged and supplied me with all the requested data.

In the course of our conversation I mentioned that I was a Jew. In correct, though heavily accented Hebrew, he then asked if I spoke Hebrew, and when I replied in the affirmative he continued to address me in Hebrew, explaining that he had lived for three years in Jerusalem as the head of the Russian Orthodox Mission.

According to his information, the Russian Orthodox Church is a tightly knit body, organized into a network of local, regional and national associations. Its primary unit is the local parish, which receives the free use of a church from the state. The parish, run by a church council headed by the pastor, is in turn part of the larger diocese, whose affairs are looked after by the diocesan Bishop and his council. The supreme authority in matters of doctrine, administration, and church justice rests with a national council consisting of bishops, clerics and laity. This council elects the "Patriarch of Moscow and All Russia" who administers his See jointly with a Holy Synod of six members.

So organized, the Orthodox Church is in a position to provide for the training of adequate cadres of priests and clerics. It maintains eight secondary theological institutions, called seminaries, in Moscow, Leningrad, Kiev, Odessa, Minsk, Saratov, Stavropol and Lutsk, and two higher institutions, called theological academics, in Moscow and Leningrad, with a total of some 1,000 students. The department of External Church Relations, created in 1946, is allowed and encouraged to maintain permanent contacts with numerous Orthodox centers abroad, and the Patriarch's emissaries travel frequently to Stockholm, Beirut, Alexandria, and China. In turn, high church representatives from abroad visit Moscow often.

The Soviet Union's 30 million Moslems — concentrated in Central Asia, the Northern and Eastern Caucasus, and the Middle Volga region — enjoy a similar status. On a Friday morning, the Moslem Sabbath, I visited the Moscow Sobornaya Mosque (7 Vipolsovskiy Proyezd) and was cor-
